			printed. This work was is also translated into English by Dr. Ballantyne, and into Hindi by Pandit Ráma Jasan of the Benares College. There are many commentaries on this work. It is a greater favourite of the Dakshiṇí and up country Pandits than of those of Bengal. It is old and correct.
14	Paper. Devanágarí character.	Divakara Gaṇaka, Benares.	The original Śutras of the Vaiśeshika philosophy. The author divides created things in two classes, Bháva and Abháva. The Bháva are then distributed in six classes, Dṛavya Guṇa, Karma, Sámánya, Viśesha, and Samaváya, Abháva into Prágabháva, Pradhvansábháva, Anyonyábháva, and Atyantábháva. The difference in division between the author of Bháshá Parichchheda and this author is this. The first divides all into seven classes, making Abháva the 7th class. The latter treats Abháva as a distinct class and thus divides the whole into ten. This work is common. The College copy is in Bengali character; old and apparently correct.
